BUTTE COUNTY RECORDS OF WEDDINGS INTERESTING

The average bridegroom in Butte county is 27 years of age when he takes his vows, and his other half is 24 years of age, records on file with the county clerk show. June is still the popular month with brides, but December runs a close second, Clerk C. F. Belding declares. "There is something about the month of December that gets 'em," says the clerk. "Maybe it is because they like to start the new year together."

AUTO REGISTRATION SHOWS BIG INCREASE

California's motor vehicle population has shown an enormous increase during the past fifteen years, according to comparisons of registration figures of 1914 and 1929, reported by the California State Automobile Association. Fifteen years ago, the state boasted 123,516 cars, while last summer the registrations had increased to 1,859,523, or more than fifteen times the figure of 1914.

Every county in the state shows an increase in the number of motor vehicles, although some of them have lost population during the past fifteen years. Los Angeles county, with a registration of 755,775, has the largest number of motor vehicles of any county, while Alpine county, in the mountains of the north, has the lowest number, with 68 vehicles.

San Mateo's police force has been increased to fourteen men, and another man added to the fire department as a result of confirmation of three appointments at last Monday night's meeting of the city council.

APPROVE RAISE OF BAY BRIDGE FARE

A 15 cent increase in toll rates for passenger cars and a 5 cent increase for passengers has been authorized for the San Francisco Bay toll bridge from San Mateo to Mt. Eden. Rates for trucks, however, have been very materially reduced.

The change in tolls was granted by the San Mateo county board of supervisors last Monday at the request of A. W. Deuell, executive vice-president of the bridge company. The new rate on passenger cars is now 60 cents, with 10 cents for each passenger. The fomer rate was 45 cents for an automobile and 5 cents for passengers.

The readjustment brings about a one-third saving in truck rates, and a 40 per cent increase in rates for passenger cars. Shippers will now pay 25 cents per ton up to six tons, and 10 cents for every ton over. The truck rates were formerly 50 cents per ton up to three tons, 25 cents for the next three tons, and 10 cents for each ton over six.

Attorney George Harrington of the San Francisco Bay Toll Bridge Company, explained that because of the former high rates, the farmer on either side of the bridge had sought cheaper routes for his produce, and that it was necessary to reduce the toll. The increase in passenger rates is for the sake of balance, the attorney explained.

A study of traffic over the bridge shows that the increase will result in a return of more than 15 per cent of the cost of the bridge, the board was told.

Preliminary steps were taken at the Monday session of the board of supervisors for the widening and improvement of the La Honda road, from the summit at the Skyline boulevard through La Honda to Bellevale, a stretch of nearly 12 miles. A petition signed by property owners along the road, citing the heavy traffic on the road, particularly tourist travel, and the frequent number of accidents because of its narrowness, was filed by the board. Supervisor John Poole spoke strongly in favor of the improvements. It is the main route through the picturesque La Honda canyon.

Contemplating creating a fire district of their own, residents of the Toyon Knolls and Highland No. 3 subdivisions, west of Redwood City, petitioned for withdrawal from the Woodside fire district. The petitioners were represented by Attorney Gilbert Ferrell of Burlingame, who explained that the withdrawal would lead to the best interests, as the area derived no benefit from the Woodside district. A petition for creation of the new fire district will be included in the ordinance that will be presented to the board for adoption.

A petition for the abandonment of the Bayshore fire district in Visitacion Valley was referred to District Attorney Franklin Swart.

The county surveyor was instructed to prepare right-of-way for the contemplated widening and straightening of Oak Knoll drive, leading to the Emerald lakes west of Redwood City, upon the request of the Oak Knoll Improvement Club

November 18 was set as the date for hearing on issuance of special bonds against unused property of the school district in Visitacion Valley to cover the $6,000 suit brought against the county by the Hanrahan Company for street improvements. The street work was completed more than a year ago, but the school district failed to pay for the improvements to its property, the suit stated.

A request for a telephone at the county memorial park by the boys' welfare committee of the San Mateo Rotary Club will be taken up with the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company. It is planned to extend a wire from the Pescadero exchange to the park.

DELIGHTFUL LUNCH GIVEN BY PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

A delightful lunch was served Wednesday noon by the ladies of the Grace Presbyterian church. The lunch was almost all profit for the ladies, as Mr. Knowles and Mr. Micco of the Peninsula Market donated the entire dinner.

Now they are infusing young blood into old veins, but we doubt that they will ever succeed in infusing old brains into young heads.

SOME HONEST BOYS

Not because honesty among boys is uncommon, but because too much stress is placed on the recording of dishonesty in the news of the day, a little story from Humboldt, Sask., is worth repeating.

Six boys weer playing in a straw-stack near that town one day recently when one of them found a purse containing $2.20. This caused them to search for more treasure, with the result that a total of $94.20 in cash and a check for $41.49 were found in the straw.

Did they divide the spoil and proceed to use it for themselves? They did not. They promptly turned it over to the Humboldt chief of police, who recalled that three men had reported that they had been robbed at this straw-stack some time before, and took steps to locate them.

Incidentally, the six boys have established a reputation for honesty which is of much greater value to them than the money they might have easily appropriated totheir own use.

RIGHT OF WAY

"Yield to the car on the right!"

This, in brief, is the rule when driving on the streets and highways of California, announces Mrs. Cleo Swhela, chairman, Safety Conference of the California State Chamber of Commerce, representing the third district, in a broadcast to all local safety committees in California, asking their co-operation in the November safety lesson on the right of way at intersections.

"Because you squeeze into an intersection a little ahead of a car coming on your right," says Mrs. Swehla, "it does not follow that you have the right of way. Where you are in the intersection is not the controlling factor. It is whether there will be a collision if both you and the fellow on the right proceed. In this situation, you should yield. Otherwise you violate the rule which may cause a serious accident with arrest and civil liability as additional results.

"The right of way lesson to all members is a part of the year-around campaign to reduce the great toll of life in the streets and highways of California as a result of automobile accidents."

Here lies the remains of Robert Gray,
Who insisted upon his right of way.
He was right, dead right!
But he's just as dead
As though he had been wrong instead.

MILLIONS FOR COMFORT

While the modern woman is not a slave to housekeeping, as her mother and grandmother were, the average American home now has conveniences and comforts far beyond those of earlier days, when all household tasks were performed by hand.

The insistence of present day women for relief from the drudgery of the past is illustrated by the expenditure of more than $800,000,000 last year for electrical home appliances, according to C. U. Williams, manufacturer of an oil burner, who has made a recent study of figures dealing with household equipment.

Among the devices installed during the year were 468,000 electric refrigerators, 92,500 motor-driven oil burners, and many thousands of washing machines, vacuum cleaners, sewing machines, and other aids to housekeeping which are today regarded as essential to the well equipped home.

With the rapid spread of electric lines to the smaller communities and rural districts, these "wife-savers" are being made vailable to an ever-increasing number of women. And every considerate husband will see that his wife has all of these conveniences that the family purse can afford.

The Carnegie investigators made the startling discovery that some of the colleges have been looking for students who can play football. And failed to find them.

Another paradox is that there is a flood of dry oratory as well as wet.

"Nothing," she said, hurriedly. "Nothing. But, Mary, doesn't it seem possible to you that someone clear from the outside, did it? And gave the key to Chad, and asked him to put it in your pocket? And that, for some reason we probably never shall discover, Chad could not, dared not, tell on the person who gave it to him? And that is why he shot himself?"

"And we hadn't thought of that!" I gasped. "I do believe it. It is as clear as day."

Her sudden, definite silence talked as plainly as any words she could have spoken.

"Danny," I questioned, "you thought of that, but in your heart you don't believe it. Do you?"

"I—I want to believe it," she evaded.

"But you don't?" I persisted.

She was silent.

"Danny," I pleaded, "tell me about it. Just tell me, dear. I'll never breathe it to a soul, if you say for me not to. What is it you know, or think that you know?"

She waited so long before answering me that I thought surely she was finding the words with which to take me into her confidence. I was so disappointed I could have cried with her, when she hid her face on my shoulder, again, and moaned, "Mary—I can't. I dare not tell. I tell you—I dare not."

She jumped up out of my lap, and ran upstairs as if wicked, dangerous things were running after her.

John came into the room. "The outfit is back, or most of it," he said. "Darn their souls! Curiosity, nothing else. But for this, they wouldn't have shown up for two days yet. I think the women went into the kitchen just now, Mary."

There they were, Belle, Sadie and Goldie, all huddled up together like a bunch of something, near the back door. As I came into the room, they jumped and screeched. The only thing that makes me madder than being scared myself is to scare somebody else. I spoke to them right sharply.

I told them that I expected them to go about their work, and to act like sensible girls while so doing.

Sadie, the sauciest of the lot, spoke up.

"We haven't decided yet that we want'a go workin' in a house where a murderer, and maybe moren' one, is livin'."

"Very well," I said. "If you are going, go now. If not, put on your aprons and get to work."

I could scarcely believe my eyes. The three of them skedaddled out through the door. I felt sort of sick, watching them go. Not because I'd have to teach new girls the work and my ways, but because their leaving gave me my first realization that the Desert Moon ranch was darkened by the shadow of sin.

When I telephoned to Sam, down in his office in the outfit's quarters, I tried to keep the truth from him; saying, only that the girls and I had had a spat, and asking him to find some new girls for me.

He came up, in about half an hour, with an Indian girl, not more than fifteen years old, trailing along behind him. Answering his nod, I went with him into the living room.

"She is the only one I could get," he said. "We'll have to send to Reno or Salt Lake. None of the outfit want their women folks working here. I don't blame them. The Desert Moon ranch is disgraced—" He stopped short, looking at a piece of paper on the writing desk just in front of him. It had been propped up against a vase; but it had slithered down into a curve. He reached for it; read it, and handed it to me.

"I killed her. Chadwick Caufield. P. S. Sorry to put you to the trouble of disposing of me. Make it cheap and snappy. I haven't a relative in the world. P. G."

"A lie," Sam said. "I tell you, she had been dead two or three hours, anyway—probably longer—when we found her. Listen, Mary. Between four and five o'clock—we all saw her alive at four—Chad sat right there at that piano, and he never left it once. Did he?"

"No, he didn't. I kept thinking he would, to join Gaby. But he didn't."

"Between five and six o'clock," Sam went on, "he was with me, every minute of the time, down in the barn and coming up to the house. Never out of my sight. Between six and seven he was with us all at supper. If he'd been gone all afternoon, I'd know that note was a lie; know it just as well as I know it now—"

"But this note! A confession! Why should he die in disgrace, when we know he was innocent?"

"God knows. To shield someone else, I reckon."

"Who?"

Sam dropped his pipe.

I heard him stamping the sparks out. I did not look down. I did not want to look down.

"He wrote it," I said. "The writing is his. So is the wording. You know it."

I guess I was too sentimental. But I couldn't bear to see Sam's good old face all aching with worry.

"Sam," I wheedled, "have sense. We've a confession here that will satisfy the world. He killed her; and, when the body was found, he shot himself. Nothing could be more reasonable. No one would doubt it. We can send this to the papers—he has no relatives to be disgraced, or to sorrow over it—and the Desert Moon will be cleared of crime. One of your favorite sayings, Sam, is to let well enough alone."

Sam drew himself up to the top of his six feet and five inches and looked down, from there, at me; away down—as far, say, as if I had suddenly dropped into a dirty old cistern. "There is no question of well enough," he shouted, so that I could hear him in my depths, "until the Desert Moon is cleaned, clean, Mary Magin. Cleaned and, fumigated, or destroyed. It is not going to be whitewashed. There is someone on this ranch who is as guilty as h—l; who knows who committed the murder; who aided and abetted it. We are going to find that person. Then we will find the murderer. They'll be hung together. After that, we can leave well enough alone."

"Suppose," I suggested, "that Chad was the accomplice."

"Somebody suggested, already today, that it was Chad who put the key in your pocket. When did he get the key to put it there? Well, say that he got it between seven and eight o'clock, when he was out scouting by himself. Did he meet some entire stranger, then, who asked him to dispose of the key? Did he agree to do it as a favor to said stranger? Did he, later, shoot himself and leave a lying confession to shield the stranger? The stranger, that is, who had killed the girl Chad loved? Chad did carry some secret to the grave with him, Mary. I am sure of that. But not a secret that we can't discover. We are going to discover it."

To doubt Sam, standing there before me talking so earnestly to me, to doubt his honesty of purpose and his goodness, was more than a question of doubting my eyes, my ears, my senses.

"Sam," I began, resolved to tell him, then and there, about those pipe ashes of his on the beaded bag. I had waited too long. Mrs. Ricker was coming down the stairs.

"I think," she said, "that Martha should not sleep so late. I fear that she is sleeping too heavily."

"It is a blessing that she can sleep," Sam said. "She is all right. Those sleeping powders are as powerful as all get-out. I'm going up, though, I'll have a look at her.

"By the way," he added, from the stairway, "I want you two ladies to be here in this room, at promptly three o'clock this afternoon."

"Upon my soul!" I said, when Sam was out of sight. "What do you suppose that means?"

Mrs. Ricker shook her head, and walked to the windows and turned her back on me.

I looked at the straight, gaunt back, and at her long arms hanging at her sides. She seemed frail. And yet, she could hold Martha still, when Martha was in one of her tantrums, and that was more than I, a much stouter woman, could do. She, with no one but Martha who did not count, had been alone in the house for an hour the evening before, while the others of us had been out hunting for Gaby.

Sam insisted that Gaby had been dead two or three hours when we found her. But was he certain of that? How did he know? Might he be mistaken? Mrs. Ricker had hated Gaby, as only a jealous woman can hate.

CHAPTER VIII

Clews.

All the while I was getting a makeshift dinner ready, that last thought of mine kept bothering me like the smell of something burning. So, as soon as dinner was over I told the Indian girl, whose name was Zinnia, to manage the dishes the best she could, and I went off up to my room.

I took up some dinner on a tray with me, for Mrs. Ricker and for Martha. When Mrs. Ricker opened her door, I managed to get the information that Martha was awake, at last, and that Mrs. Ricker had just been helping her with her bath.

"Is she all right, now?" I questioned.

"I—suppose so." She edged the door shut, in my face.

I went into my room and combed my hair. I can always think better when I am doing some absolutely unimportant thing like that. But, today, my thoughts whirred, and tossed, and foamed.

Sam's pipe ashes. The key in my pocket. Chad's suicide. Chad's note of confession. Gaby's fear. Mrs. Ricker alone in the house. What it was that Danny knew and dared not tell?

Sam's pipe ashes— Lands alive! What had been the matter with me? Sam was the only member of our household who smoked a pipe, but he was not the only man in creation who did; nor was his the only pipe. I supposed, that had ever dropped and spilled its contents. A very nice and comforting thought, if I could have fooled myself into believing it.

Try as I might, I couldn't keep from thinking that part of Sam's talk was bluff—that is, soon as I got away from him I thought that. Did it mean that he was trying to shield Chad? No. It could not mean that. Besides, Chad himself had surely been trying to shield someone. Sam? Gaby had feared someone, when she had left the house. No woman had ever feared Sam.

Mrs. Ricker had hated Gaby. But, so had John hated Gaby. Mrs. Ricker had said— John had said—

I jumped to my feet, holding my head in my hands. I could not endure thinking. I must stop it. I must find work to do; someone to talk to. I ran across my room and pulled open the door, just in time to see Hubert Hand straighten from where he had been stooping to my keyhole.

"Hubert Hand," I said, "why are you listening at my keyhole?"

"I wasn't listening. I was looking, or trying to. This keyhole peering is the bunk, Mary. You might as well cut it out yourself." With that he turned and walked on down the hall.

I stood watching him, trying to account for an odd sense of relief that had come to me. In a minute I understood. Since he had been at my keyhole, he must have had some suspicion of me, for something. Possibly he had a good reason for that suspicion. As good a reason as I had, for suspicioning Sam, and John, and Mrs. Ricker. He was clear off the track with his suspicion. Probably, I was just as far off with mine.

He turned, quickly and came back to me. He looked up and down the hall. He lowered his voice to just above a whisper. "Mary," he said. "I've gone at this all wrong. I'm off my nut today—that's all. I guess I cared a lot more for the girl than I thought I did. By G—d, I believe I loved her. It is h—l—having her clear gone. But my hanging for her murder isn't going to do her any good; not now."

Horrified, I backed away from him. For one wild moment I thought that the man was confessing to me.

"No!" he said. "Not that! I swear to God I'm innocent. But they are going to try to pin it on me, and they may not have much trouble doing it. I want to make a bargain with you. You'll get the best of it, for I know d—n well that I'm innocent, and I don't think that you are—entirely. It is this. If you'll keep your mouth shut, I'll keep mine shut. Fifty-fifty. Will you do it?"

"Hubert Hand," I said, "I don't know one solitary thing about you that would be of any importance if I told it to the world. Anything that you think you know about me, I'm glad and willing to have you broadcast, or publish in the papers."

"Sure of that? Sure you are willing to have me broadcast that you found the body; that you didn't scream; that you stayed there, quiet and alone with it for ten minutes, before you gave the alarm?"

"I was sick, stunned, dizzy with horror."

"Probably any jury would believe that, all right. Just the same, I'll bet it would save you a lot of trouble, now and later, if no one knew anything about your lonesome five minutes, or longer. I'll tell you how I know. I came out of my room at the minute you opened the attic door. I saw you leave the hall to run up the steps. I went on downstairs. Chad was kidding around down there collecting keys. I didn't know what he wanted with them, fortunately for you, or I'd have said you'd gotten the door open—"

"And—and," I couldn't keep my teeth from chattering, "you think I killed her, then?"

"Rot! She had been dead for hours. Rigor was complete. No, all I think is that you know more than you are telling."

"I tell you, I was frozen stiff, with horror."

"All right. Tell the jury. Tell them, too, why you came rushing out of your room, as you did just now, white and trembling. Don't like your thoughts, all by your lonesome, do you? Come on, Mary. Be a sport. We are both innocent. But— Fifty-fifty? Shut mouth for shut mouth?"

His talk about telling a jury scared me. I had heard of third degrees. I knew that if I ever told anyone but Sam himself, about those pipe ashes, the words would choke the life out of me, as I would want them to do.

"I'd Had No Idea of Telling That, Anyway."

"Hubert Hand, I'm going to be honest with you. I don't know what it is you want me to keep my mouth shut about."

"Don't?" Well, I want you to keep still about that conversation you overheard between Ollie Ricker and me in the cabin. She went back to get her parasol and saw you coming out. We knew you had been hiding there, listening."

"Lands alive!" I said. "I'd had no idea of telling that, anyway. It was none of my business."

"Fine! I didn't have any idea of telling anything, either. It was none of my business. Shake on it."

I let him take my hand. I said yes, when he made me promise. I felt like I'd been associating with a side-winder.

As I was trying to hurry past Gaby's door, Danny opened it, and asked me if I would come in and sit with her for a while.

I should have been there, long before. I went right in, apologizing, and trying to explain. But, when I saw that she meant for us to sit in Gaby's room, I suggested that we go somewhere else.

"No, please Mary," she said. "I don't want to be alone; but I do want to sit here. I feel as if here, with all her things around me, I might—get in touch—I mean—something might come to me. If she is still on earth, she would come here. Wouldn't she? And she would try, I am sure, to give me a sign. Something to help me—to help all of us. If it should come, I want to be here to receive it."

"It won't come, Danny, dear," I said.

"No. I suppose not." She leaned back in her chair and sighed, and her arms dropped straight down over the chair's arms. The engagement ring that John had given her slipped from her finger and came rolling toward me. I scrambled to pick it up. When I rose from the floor she had jumped to her feet. She was ashy, shaking and trembling as if she had a chill.

"Mary! Promise me that you'll never tell that, not to anyone. It didn't— It couldn't mean anything."

"It means," I said, handing her the ring, "that you are wasting away. You'd better let me go down and bring you up some good, hot soup; or an eggnog."

She clung to me. "Don't leave me, Mary. I am afraid. I am dreadfully afraid. Promise that you won't tell about the ring. It—didn't mean anything."

I will admit that I did not like it any too well myself. There, just as she was asking for a sign, the ring, which had fitted snugly enough, I had thought, had dropped off. But, of course I had to put up a brave front to her.

"Nonsense," I said. "I won't tell anybody, because it is nothing to tell. All that it means is that the ring is too large for you."

Danny sat down in a deep chair, opposite me, her hands clasped on her knees, and leaned forward, and looked into my eyes.

"Definite things, Mary," she said, "are always so wise. This was a silly, futile little accident. The ring has dropped off, I suppose, half a dozen times this week. Gaby's last note to me was all affection. Living, if Gaby could have taken John away from me, for herself, she would have done it. Dead—she wants us to marry. I know that. As for any other implication— If only Uncle Sam were not so heartless," she finished.

"Heartless!" I spoke sharply in spite of myself. "If the Creator ever made a man with a bigger heart than Sam Stanley's, nobody ever saw him."

"He has been good to you," she said. "But you give him his own way about everything."

I reminded her that Sam was John's father.

"Uncle Sam is not John's father," she said. "John is uncle's adopted son. They are so different, so utterly different, they could not be father and son."

"Maybe not," I said, trying to keep pleasant, for I did not want to be snapping at the poor child on this day, "but no real son ever loved his father better than John loves Sam. He all but worships him, and he has, ever since he was a little fellow."

"I know. I know. Sometimes I think John cares more for uncle than he does for me. Mary, tell me, honestly. Do you think John loves me as much as he loves Uncle Sam?" I should hate to have John have to choose between uncle and me."

"That is foolish talk. Why should John ever have to choose between you and Sam?"

She sighed, and shook her head. A sudden certainty came to me. Whatever it was that Danny had refused that morning to tell me, whatever it was that she had said that she dared not tell, had had something, somehow, to do with Sam.

"What I can not understand," Danny said, "is, that Gaby knew that she might be killed. And yet, so far as anyone knows, she did not do one thing to save herself. If only, only she had confided in me! Surely I could have found some way to help her—to save her."

"You know, dear," I said, "I think that Gaby was not—well, at least not doing any clear thinking, those last few days."

Indians Outstrip Deer in Fleetness of Foot

The greatest runners in the world are the Tarahumare Indians, who have been known to continue 170 miles without stopping. A few years ago Thomas Zafiro and Leonicio San Miguel, members of this tribe, did a distance of 62½ miles on the highway from Panchuca to Mexico City in 9 hours and 37 minutes without any evidence of fatigue. Translated "Tarahumare" is foot runners. They are said to be insensible to heat and cold, using the same blankets summer and winter. They love to tell how their forefathers were the couriers of the Aztec monarchs. Today the Mexicans employ them to run wild horses into the corrals. The Tarahumare prove the expression poets love to use, "fleet as a deer," to be true, for when they are on the chase they outstrip their antlered prey.

Running is not confined to the men of this tribe; the women enter into it with the same zest. As with the Zuni, there is much preparation for the sporting event. The priests practice many kinds of sorcery; human bones are hidden along the course, and woe to the runner whose foot unearths one! Each man taking part is rubbed down by the "shaman," or priest, to protect him against evil influences.

Facts About Lightning

The Weather bureau says that when lightning is about to occur between a cloud and the earth (it usually occurs between different parts of the same cloud) there is a great accumulation of electricity of one kind, usually the negative, at the surface of the earth and of the opposite kind in the lower portion of the cloud. This imposes an electric strain on the medium between the two. The break, or discharge, consisting essentially of a flow of negative electricity, or electrons, toward the positive charge, may begin at any point in midair along the path and progress (this break progress) in both directions at the same time, or it may begin at either end and from there progress toward the other.

Champion Piper Played His Own Death Lament

As death crept upon Pipe Major George S. McLennan of Aberdeen, Scotland, claimed to be the champion piper of the world, he played his own lament on the bagpipes. Feeling himself, as he said, "slippin' awa'," he asked his elder son to play on the pipes. The boy did so, and the aged man then asked him to fill the pipes with wind and give them to him. With shaking hands the dying man fingered out the notes of a last lament. Death was fast approaching and the notes became slower and slower, until they died away as the pipe major fell back on his pillow. At nine McLennan won a special medal for his playing in his first competition at Paisley. The following year he appeared before Queen Victoria, the first piper to appear before royalty since 1626, when Patrick Mor MacCrimmon played before Charles I. McLennan won more than 2,000 prizes in bagpipe competitions.

EARLY CRIME NEWS

By many the apparent tendency of daily newspapers to give undue prominence to stories of crime is greatly deplored, but looking backward we may find a similar tendency in all history and literature.

The Old Testament contains the records of many crimes of every kind, beginning with Cain's murder of his brother, Abel, though without the minute details which accompany the modern newspaper narratives.

Before newspapers were of general circulation, important financial and business houses of Europe arranged with central agencies for "news letters," which were primarily for the purpose of keeping informed on commerical matters.

An interesting collection of these letters, from the correspondence of the House of Fugger, international bankers, is still preserved. They contain much news of crime, as well as that of business.

One of these letters, dated at Augsburg, December 2, 1585, contains accounts of three murders, one suicide, one attempt to suicide, and one accidental drowning. In another there is an account of a scandal, with a spicy recital of details.

Still another letter, from Moscow, depicts the horrible atrocities being perpetrated in Russia. It says: "The folk are pitilessly and cruelly killed in their thousands. They freeze to death and perish by violent means. Corn, cattle and all else which is needed for man's sustenance is burnt and altogether much wanton damage is wrought."

Crimes and disasters loom large in history and in the news of the day, forming an inevitable part of the record of humanity. Not to know about them would mean ignorance regarding the realities of life. But many of the offensive particulars might well be omitted from our newspapers.

WORLD'S EIGHTEEN GREATEST

Picking the world's greatest men, like selecting an all-star football or baseball team, is a difficult undertaking—one in which no two persons would likely reach the same result independently.

The feat was recently attempted, however, by a Western University, with a view to placing statues of the world's eighteen greatest men on the facade of a new public library, the following being selected:

Adam Smith, social science; Beethoven, music; Dante, poetry; Darwin, biological science; Leonardo da Vinci, art; Benjamin Franklin, public service; Galileo, physical science; Goethe, poetry; Grotius, international law; Gutenberg, printing; Herodotus, history; Homer, poetry; Justinian, law and administration; Moses, religion; Newton, mathematics and physics; Pasteur, medical science; Plato, philosophy; Shakespeare, drama.

One of the striking aspects of this list is that it includes three poets, besides Shakespeare, indicating that poetry presents the most likely path to immortal fame, however unreliable it may be as a practical career during one's lifetime.

Franklin is the only American in the list, which may noe be so poor a showing as at first appears, considering that the entire historical period from Moses onward is covered in the search for celebrities.

CANADA'S DISCOVERER

Canada some time ago honored her discoverer, Jacques Cartier, the famous French navigator, by the erection at Quebec of a magnificent statue, a replica of that raised to his memory in his native seaport, St. Malo, France, where he was born in 1494.

Commanding two ships uunder a commission from Francis I of France in 1534, he crossed the Atlantic, touching at Cape Buenavista, Newfoundland, sailed northward along the coast and then southwest through the Straits of Belle Isle, discovering the mainland of Canada and taking possession in the name of his king, thinking it a part of Asia.

The following year he explored the St. Lawrence as far as the Indian village of Hoshelaga, the present site of the city of Montreal. After many hardships, with his crew weakened by scurvy, a disease then unknown in Europe, he returned to France in 1536.

In 1541, Cartier returned to Canada with five ships and established a settlement, which he named Charlesbourg-Royal, near the present site of Quebec. The rigorous climate and attacks of hostile Indians so discouraged the settlers that Cartier abandoned the place and took them back to France in 1542. He lived quietly at St. Malo until his death in 1557.

While Cartier did not found a permanent colony, his explorations blazed the way for the building of a great empire—but under another flag.

WHAT BOYS THINK

We hear a great deal about the waywardness of children of the present—but it occurred to a Chicago minister to ge the viewpoints of youngsters themselves, which he did from 175 boys, through asking them to write freely their ideas on "What's wrong with the home?"

Among the answers given by these boys, who ranged from 14 to 18 years of age, were the following:

"A boy wants a mother who can keep a secret and not tell the neighbors everything about him."

"The girl's word is taken and the boy's word is always doubted."

"Home is a court room and every member of the family tries to take a hand in raising the boy."

"Parents never admit when they are wrong."

"People who lead the wildest lives before marriage are the strictest parents."

"Mothers try to hold other boys up as models too much."

These are only a few of the answers—but they indicate that boys believe there are a good many faults on the parents' side, and perhaps that is true.

With all our laws for making people good, modern parents probably feel that home training is unnecessary.

Still, we suppose there are some folks who don't amount to enough to get themselves investigated.

PLANE CARRIES 170 PEOPLE

In a test over Lake Constance, Switzerland, a few days ago, the great Dorner flying boat Do-X flew for nearly an hour, carrying 170 passengers and a total load of 52 tons.

This is the greatest number of persons ever carried by any type of aircraft in the world, and adds another record to a year of astounding new feats in aviation. The largest number of persons previously carried by a heavier than air machine was 60.

In the Do-X flight only 169 were counted for record, however, as one passenger was a 4-year-old boy.

Another gratifying feature of the test was the rapidity with which the big craft took to the air, rising after skimming the surface of the lake for only 50 seconds, a quicker take-off than any made in its previous trial flights.

Then still another aviation record was broken about the same time, when Lieutenant Dinor of Germany kept a glider plane aloft for 14 hours and 44 minutes. A glider has no motor, of course, but is kept in the air by skillful maneuvering in taking advatage of the natural air currents.

Possibly other records will have been made before this gets into print. It's hard to keep up with these flying folk.

"DEATH AVENUE" TO GO

An idea of the immensity of the problems presented by modern traffic in large cities is suggested by the announcement that $175,000,000 will be spent in re-locating tracks and eliminating dangerous crossings in New York City by the New York Central, in co-operation with city and state authorities.

This means the end of a section known as "Death Avenue," on account of its many fatalities and injuries, due to grade crossings.

The enormous sum involved in this improvement is to be spent over a period of about six years, according to present estimates, and represents a sum nearly one-half as great as the construction cost of the Panama Canal. Actual work was begun this month in a preliminary way, and some large contracts are to be let soon.

By this project the railroad facilities of the metropolis will be greatly improved, and at the same time one of the worst danger spots in America will be eliminated. It will cost a lot of money, but it will be worth it.

Unmarried women are said to appreciate fiction more, probably because the married ones are so used to it.

Alfred Rosino, local agent for the Pioneer Insurance Company, returned home on Tuesday of last week from Los Angeles.

Mrs. Howard Green and baby daughter, of Avon, California, are visitors at the home of Mr. and Mrs. B. S. Greene, on Bryant street.

Mrs. G. Bianchi and daughter Martha, who recently returned from a trip to Italy, are visiting Mrs. Bianchi's brother, Mr. Biangavini, in San Jose.

The friends of Mr. and Mrs. James Metcalf are sorry to hear they have left Colma and have moved to Calistoga, where they are now making their home.

The Colma Volunteer Fire Department responded to an alarm of fire last Friday at Salada Beach. The truck driven by Ricco Benedetti made the trip in record-breaking time.

John Olcesce, who has been on the sick list and under the care of Dr. Holmes Smith, of San Bruno, is reported as on the road to recovery, which is good news to his many local friends.

The local friends of Mrs. John Soldavini are happy to hear she has returned to her home in Ingleside Terrace from St. Lukes' hospital with a fine daby daughter, and latest reports are that both are doing nicely.

Mrs. Stumpf, president of the Womans Club of San Mateo, was appointed last Monday by the San Mateo county board of supervisors to fill the vacancy on the social service board caused by the recent death of Mrs. W. Bain.

Mrs. George Michels, nee Frances Woolsey, of Tracy, California, who has been very ill, is reported on the road to recovery, which is good news to all her friends in Colma. Mrs. Michels is the daughter of Mrs. Emma Woolsey, Colma's popular and well known librarian.

Victorine Boetto, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. Boetto, who has been making her home with her sister, Mrs. Al. Bandettini, in Colma, moved to Menlo Park last week, where she will now make her home with her parents. Her little Colma chums are pleased to hear she expects to spend the week ends in Colma.

Many from this locality are planning to attend the second annual ball of the Peninsula Police Officers' Association for the benefit of their widows' and orphans' fund, to be held on Saturday evening of next week, November 16, at Pacific City Pavilion. Music will be furnished by Art Weidner's orchestra. Admisison will be $1, and ladies will be admitted free.

Mrs. Eva Claus, of San Francisco, was a dinner guest last Monday evening at the home of her daughter, Mrs. L. Merlo.

Paul Belli has been confined to his bed and under the doctor's care for the past week. His many friends wish him a speedy recovery.

Mr. and Mrs. F. Goss and a party of relatives returned home last week after a very delightful visit of several months in Italy. They report having a wonderful trip.

Misis Rita Benassini entertained a large group of friends on Thursday evening of last week at her home in celebration of Hallowe'en. The evening was delightfully spent in dancing and games, after which tempting refreshments were served. The home was prettily decorated in black and orange crepe paper and many suggestions of Hallowe'en. Thomas Bossi, who returned two weeks ago from a six months tour of Continental Europe, reports many interesting features of the trip. While in Europe, Mr. Bocci, accompanied by his father, L. Bocci, made the trip from London to Paris and Venice to Turin, Italy, by airplane. Upon arriving at Turin, an automobile was purchased at the Fiat factory, in which they toured Italy. While in Italy several visits were made to Montecatini, Viareggio, and Florence, internationally known and interesting summer resorts and playgrounds of gaiety. Thomas Bocci, who is manager of L. Bocci & Sons, visited Carrara and Pietrasanta, Italy's great marble and sculpture centers, making extensive purchases of varied marbles and statuary. L. Bocci remained in Italy, where he expects to visit, making periodical stops at the different interesting Italian cities for another year and a half.

Harry S. Black, of New York, will probably use a life preserver on Saturday nights in future. He fainted in his bathtub and so nearly drowned that a pulmotor crew required several hours to revive him.

Lawrence, Kan., merchants will be wary of fly-by-night advertising solicitors for a while. Two "students" collected $500 for space in a fake publication and skipped the town.

A young lawyer must not advertise, but must sit and starve if necessary until clients come, according to the American Bar Association's code of ethics. But he can make speeches, teach Sunday School, pep up the Rotary Club and run for office without being considered an advertiser.

Joseph P. Story, of New York, predicts that his home town will have 30 million inhabitants in 100 years from now, with skyscrapers 100 stories high and a network of underground streets. Maybe he is entirely correct, but it is only fair to our readers to add that he is a real estate man.

William H. Small, of St. Louis, believes that the sun revolves around the earth and offers $100 for proof to the contrary. The difficulty in earning that hundred would not be in furnishing the proof, but in getting the same through William's understanding.

Some officers of the Army and Navy may be a bit uppish, but not all. It is said that a Naval officer recently assigned to duty as instructor at Annapolis frankly said to his class: "Well gentlemen, I don't know a darned thing about this subject, but I will try to be a fair referee between you and the text-book."

VETS TO PARTICIPATE IN EDUCATION WEEK

American Education Week, sponsored each year by the National Education Association of the United States and the American Legion, will be observed this year during the week of November 11 to 17, according to an announcement by State Commander Clarence L. Kincaid and B. W. Gearhart of Fresno, chairman of the Legion's Americanism commission. Legion Posts throughout the country will provide speakers and will otherwise aid educational authorities in making the movement a success again thes year, they declared.

"The purpose of American Education Week," the commander said, "is to direct public attention to the schools and to acquaint the public with the work of the schools, with their ideals, achievements and needs. This week is observed every year during the week which includes Armistice day. A vital theme of education is emphasized every day."

U. S. COURT TO HEAR THE TRUCK TAX CASE

The United States Supreme Court will pass on the validity of the California law which imposes a tax on automobile trucks operating on the public highways.

Washington dispatches stated that the court consented to hear the appeals from California trucking operators who for more than a year have protested that the tax is discriminatory.

The trucking operators attacked the act because it levies a tax on trucks and automobiles using city streets only, for the upkeep of county highways.

"BLACKMAIL" IN SECOND WEEK AT MARION DAVIES THEATRE

An honor paid few pictures is that given "Blackmail," the all-talking English thriller, now in its second week at the Marion Davies Theatre, San Francisco. "Blackmail" is one of Englands' first offerings in the way of talking pictures, and it introduces a technique and simplicity of presentation that will give our overseas friends plenty of added prestige. The story concerns the efforts of a crook to blackmail the sweetheart of a Scotland Yards detective—and the consequent battle of wits between these two men—leading to a startling climax.

CALIFORNIA NEWS BRIEFS

Humboldt County experienced the first rainless September since 1877, J. M. Jones, meteorologist of the local weather bureau, reported.

Building permits in the city of Vallejo for month of September were $74,450. The city officials consider this a record showing.

Demand for an increase of wages from $9.25 to $10.25 per day was served on employers by members of the Fresno Electricians' Union.

Every automobile stolen from Monterey since July, 1928, has been recovered, according to the Monterey police department. It is believed that this 100 per cent record in the recovery of stolen cars is unique in California.

Thirty-five new families have moved to Manteca during September, it is shown by the water connections which have been made during that period by E. M. Leventon, water superintendent. The high school and both local grammar schools now show the heaviest enrollment in the history of Manteca.

Plans of the DeVilbris Construction Company of Oklahoma, to construct a $100,000 hotel at Red Bluff, failed to interest members of the board of directors of the Red Bluff Chamber of Commerce to whom the propostiion was presented by E. R. Hodgsen, representative of the company.

Up in the hills of Sierra County a sluice box was recently robbed, according to a report from Downieville. It stated that during the absence of F. J. Foster, operator of the Gold Nugget Mine above Downieville, some one got at the unguarded sluice boxes and cleaned the riffles in which it is estimated gold worth approximately $4,000 was impounded.

Building activities during the month of September in the four peninsula cities of San Mateo, Burlingame, Palo Alto and Redwood City, amounted to $586,645. A year ago a total of $727,386 in building permits was reported. Burlingame led with a total of $282,100 in permits folowed by San Mateo with a total of $180,755. For Palo Alto the total was $86,325 and for Redwood City, $37,465.

American tourists are heeding the old admonition, "Go West," in tremendously increasing numbers, the State Department of Public Works disclosed tn comparative tables of the auto travel to national parks of the West over the last six years. In 1923, according to the report, 191,287 private cars entered twelve of the western parks. Last year the number of cars invading the same parks jumped to 439,049—an increase of 129 per cent in six years.

Improvement of Mare Island Navy Yard was promised by Congressman Phil D. Swing of San Diego. The congressman, on an inspection recently praised the progress being made on construction of a cruiser and submarine. "Mare Island is ten years behind in modern facilities, and if the yard maintains its record of building war vessels within estimates I will make it my personal duty to urge that funds thus saved be turned back for improvements," he said.

Purchase of Jenner-by-the-sea resort property at the mouth of the Russian river and its conversion into a $400,000 yacht harbor and fishing headquarters for the sportsmen's division of the United Commercial Travelers is awaiting approval of the purchasing committee of the organization. Improvements included in the project contemplate erection of a $125,000 clubhouse, auto camp, 80 cottages, the remainder of the $400,000 to finance the yacht harbor and landscape work.

A new bridge, operated gratis by the government, is now being used to cross the Mokelumne Rver from Amador County to Calvaras County. Many years ago the Big Bar bridge, as it is known, was a famous toll bridge. Joaquin Murietta, notorious bandit, used the bridge many times, always evading the toll charge. Pedestrians were charged 25 cents to cross. A horse and buggy took in 75 cents for a round trip. The bridge was also the site of many bloody battles betwen the Indians and the Chinese settlers.

California's blind, dependent in large part upon the state library system for education and reading matter, are now offered a larger dip into hidden knowledge deprived them because of their infirmity. Incorporation of the Braille Institute of America, Inc., with Mayor John C. Porter of Los Angeles heading the directorate, promised spread of the raised print publications and special schooling in vocational and economic matters exclusively for benefit of the sightless. The institute, with headquarters in Los Angeles, has also as directors, Luther Mayo, Robert A. Odell and Frank L. Meline of Los Angeles and A. L. Sonderegger of La Verne.

Contractors who bid on pier contracts for the proposed Golden Gate bridge must familiarize themselves with conditions confronting them and not complain about eventualities after the contract is awarded. This was the edict laid down by the bridge district board of directors. Another peculiarity in the specifications is that no contractor can work his men more than eight hours daily, while at the same time the construction work must proceed day and night if Joseph Strauss, engineer of the project, so rules.

ONLY A DOCTOR KNOWS WHAT A LAXATIVE SHOULD BE

Danger lies in careless selection of laxatives! By taking the first thing that comes to mind when bad breath, headaches, dizziness, nausea, biliousness, gas on stomach and bowels, lack of appetite or energy warns of constipation, you risk forming the laxative habit.

Depend on a doctor's judgment in choosing your laxative. Here's one made from the prescription of a specialist in bowel and stomach disorders. Its originator tried it in thousands of cases; found it safe for women, children and old folks; thoroughly effective for the most robust man. Today, Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, as it is called, is the world's most popular laxative. It is composed of fresh herbs and other pure ingredients. You can get it, in generous bottles and ready for use, at any drugstore.

Youth Always Shocking

Fifteen years ago we were hearing all about the wild girls who broke home ties and set forth on a business career. Today older people are shaking their heads over air-minded youth, and day after day we find young people going in for aviation. My children will think nothing of the airplane, just as I consider an automobile commonplace. We accept as matter-of-fact the things to which we are accustomed, and do not stop to realize that they are the very things that shocked another generation.—Rachel Neiswender in the Household Magazine.

Lights in Swimming Pool

The latest in indoor swimming pools is described in the American Architect. Not a light appears in the room above the water, but powerful bulbs below the water level in the pool throw upward a soft, clear glow which both lights the area above the pool and permits spectators to follow every movement of the swimmers.

New Brunswick Once French

What is now the Canadian province of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick was known in the days of the French regime as Acadia. The country passed to Great Britain under the treaty of Utrecht in 1713 and became known as Nova Scotia, the Latin for New Scotland.

When the world hears only of a man's mistakes it always discounts his real merits.

FIND "FRIEND IN NEED"

Mother and Daughter Praise Vegetable Compound

Johnson City, N. Y. —"My daughter was only 20 years old, but for two years she worked in misery. She was all run-down, nervous, had aches and pains and no appetite. I was taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound with good results so she decided to try it. Before she had taken two bottles her appetite was better, she was more cheerful and was able to work. I cannot praise your medicine too highly. It is wonderful for mothers and for daughters. It's surely 'a friend in need'."—Mrs. L. E. Hall, 223 Floral Avenue, Johnson City, N. Y.

Goes to Hospital to Learn Beauty Aid

"THE first time I heard of it," writes Mrs. E. Whitney of 35 Parker Street, Bangor, Maine, "was when I was at the Hospital. I was very nervous and run down and after my baby daughter was born the doctor began giving me something. In about ten days I felt like a new person. Before then, I was miserable. My skin was in very bad condition and I could not understand what made it clear up so quickly.

"Before I left I asked the House Doctor what kind of medicine it was that cleared up my skin and made me feel so much better. He said 'My dear girl, didn't you ever hear of Nujol? Hospitals aren't the only place where you can get it! You can buy it most everywhere!'

"I have been using Nujol ever since, and I think it is wonderful."

That's the great thing about Nujol. Not a medicine, contains no drugs, can't possibly hurt you, forms no habit—and if you are like most other people its simple natural way of bodily lubrication will do wonders for you, too.

You see, all of us have an excess of body poisons that make our skins sallow, only able to work at half or quarter our real ability. When Nujol absorbs these poisons and carries them off easily, normally, naturally, we just feel like a million dollars.

Doctor laughed when asked "What cleared my skin?"

Try Nujol for two weeks, and see what happens. It costs only as much as a ticket to a good movie, and it will mean so much to you. In sealed packages at any drug store. Start feeling fine, this very day!

When Women Bristled With Jet Ornaments

There was a time within the memory of living men when every woman in England wore Whitby jet. Not to have worn Whitby jet would have seemed like an insult to Queen Victoria.

The jet was carved into ingenious brooches, it was made into bracelets and into beads. Impressive ornaments, like necklets of black diamonds, rose and fell on Victorian bosoms. Gowns were heavily embroidered with jet "bugles."

Such garments (seen occasionally nowadays on the bodies of theatrical landladies) were like a standard work on British respectability. How our fathers dared to make love to women who bristled and tinkled forbiddingly in jet is a subject for some future historian.—H. V. Morton, in "The Call of England."

Neal's Mother Has Right Idea

Within a few months there will be no more feverish, bilious, headachy, constipated, pale and puny children. That prophecy would surely come true if every mother could see for herself how quickly, easily, and harmlessly the bowels of babies and children are cleansed, regulated, given tone and strength by a product which has proved its merit and reliability to do what is claimed for it to millions of mothers in over fifty years of steadily increasing use.

As mothers find out from using it how children respond to the gentle influence of California Fig Syrup by growing stronger, sturdier and more active daily they simply have to tell other mothers about it. That's one of the reasons for its overwhelming sales of over four million bottles a year.

A Western mother, Mrs. Neal M. Todd, 1701 West 27th St., Oklahoma City, Okla., says: "When my son, Neal, was three years old he began having constipation. I decided to give him California Fig Syrup and in a few days he was all right and looked fine again. This pleased me so much that I have used Fig Syrup ever since for all his colds or little upset spells. It always stops his trouble quick, strengthens him, makes him eat."

Always ask for California Fig Syrup by the full name and see that the carton bears the word "California." Then you'll get the genuine.

All in the Family

A sedate business man (John Jones, shall we call him?) was rather annoyed the other morning to be stopped and ticketed by a motor policeman, for speeding. But his annoyance changed to some feeling much more acute when the officer, writing out the tag, remarked innocently: "That's funny, I just arrested a Billy Jones, of this same address, this morning on his way to high school!"

The Foolish Miser

Charles Hayden, one of the heads of the new $200,000,000 express companies combine, condemned misers at a dinner in New York.

"When some old miser dies," he said, "after a life of self-denial and discomfort, leaving behind him three or four millions that haven't done him any good at all, I think of the young man in the cafeteria.

"This young man leaned back in his chair and sighed, half for rage and half for grief.

"'What's the matter, Bill?' said the young man who was with him.

"Bill pointed to his plate.

"'This here steak and kidney pie,' he explained. 'See all that kidney? Well, I saved it up to eat the last, and now I'm so full I can't touch it. Gee, ain't it a shame?'"

Y. W. C. A. TO OBSERVE WEEK OF PRAYER AND WORLD FELLOWSHIP

In company with Young Wemens' Christian Associations in forty-six countries, the San Francisco Y. W. C. A. will observe the annual World Week of Prayer and Fellowship, November 10-17, with a series of programs at Central Branch, 620 Sutter street. The week was designated this year by Hon. Mrs. Montague Waldegrave of London, president of the Worlds' committee. Mrs. Waldegrave in her call to prayer received by Miss Johanna Volkmann, president of the San Francisco Association, emphasizes the power of prayer when she says: "Prayer open up a whole new world of infinite possibilities of power and life. Of one thing we may feel quite sure in this changing world, and that is that we should pray. The week comes to unite us as a family of many nations."

Lihaloma Club of Girl Reserves will meet Tuesday at 3:30 o'clock in the Girl Reserve club rooms at 620 Sutter street, and continue its World Fellowship Tour, stopping in Czecho-Slovakia. A program of music and folk customs will be presented.

Members of Aheeta Club of Girl Reserves will hold a World Fellowship dinner Tuesday evening at 6 o'clock in the club rooms.

Miss Florence Brugger, of International Institute Branch, Y. W. C. A., will speak on "The World in San Francisco," at the worldwide program to be held by the San Francisco State State Teachers' College Club in the Business Girls' club rooms Tuesday evening, at 5:30 o'clock.

The Girl Reserve World Fellowship vespers on Sunday afternoon, November 17, at 4 o'clock at Central Branch, 620 Sutter street, will formally close the World Week of Prayer. Inter-Club Council, which is made up of representatives from all the high school Girl Reserve clubs in the city, is in charge of the vespers.

STRICTER DEPORTATION LAWS GREATLY NEEDED

Amendments strengthening the existing laws on deportation of aliens were urged recently by Representative William P. Holladay, former member of the House Committee on Immigration, which deals with deportation. In this regard he said, in part:

"I think Congress should strengthen the laws now on the statute books relating to undesirable aliens and enforcement of their deportation.

"I firmly believe that provisions of existing law not only have permitted the states to rid themselves of alien criminals who would have been public charges and a burden on the states, but that the law has proven a strong influence for the good on aliens generally. I believe that the existing law has proven a deterrent to crime. I have heard of some particular cases of aliens who possibly have been violating a law but who have announced that they have reformed and intend to be law-abiding citizens, because of the fear of being deported from the United States.

"I am convinced that the restrictive immigration law of July 1, 1924, a permanent statute, is as important as any law that Congress has enacted for many years. It has kept out the excess of foreign labor and has been a godsend to American labor."

FISH AND GAME NOTES

By J. H. NEUSTADT

The annual convention of the Associated Sportsmen of California was held at the Whitcomb Hotel, San Francisco on October 25 and 26, and was one of the most unanimous and constructive gatherings ever held by this organization.

Delegates from the 127 clubs forming the Association of Sportsmen were present and represented territory from the Oregon boundary to San Diego.

A signal honor was paid San Mateo county by the election of Mr. J. H. Neustadt as vice-president.

The state-wide importance of this organization and recognized value was demonstrated by the attendance of Eugene Bennett, attorney of the commission, Major Farley, the chief executive officer of the commission, E. L. Macauley, chief of the state patrol, and other commission officers, all of whom heartily endorsed the good work of the association.

The press was represented by J. P. Cuenin of the Examiner, and Leo K. Wilson of the Chronicle, who are both known as 100 per cent conservationists.

The convention ended with a banquet presided over by Mr. Albert Lindley, the well known toastmaster, and was a unanimous and pronounced success.

Speeches were made by Fred G. Stevenot, representative of the governor, Senator Sanborn Young, I. Zellerbach, and others of note, and all announced their devotion to conservation of the state's wild life.

The United States was represented by Mr. George Tonkin, game protector, and L. A. Barrett, assistant chief of the forestry service.

All these gentlemen were loud in their praise of the splendid work already done, and bespoke for the coming year a yet greater growth, as the public is alive to the necessity of conserving and propagating the valuable assets of fish, game and forests.

Of the 120 bills presented to the last legislature in the interest of fish and game, only twenty-seven became law, and some of these are not in the interest of fish and game, but rather the interests of constituents.

One particularly disliked and already protested by fish and game organizations is known as Senate Bill 393.

This law gives power to owners of growing crops to call a warden who shall to the best of his ability stop the depredation of any animals causing such damage, even to the extreme of killing such animals in or out of season.

Already does have been killed in accordance with this law, and a protest by an organiztion of an adjoining county has been sent to the Fish and Game Commission requesting that wardens be called off such practices until the constitutionality of the law be determined.

The writer has details of all of the twenty-seven laws, and anyone interested can get information upon request.

California's fresh fishery products lead the world. 1928 was the banner year. Coast fish reached the remarkable total of 528 million pounds. Sardines led the list with 342 million pounds. Mackerel, owing to increased canning activity, reached a total of 35 million pounds, and tuna was third with nearly 14 million pounds.

Sole, rockfish, salmon, skipjack, abalones, bonita herring and halibut make up the total in the order given.

Monterey county district heads the list on account of the sardine catches, but Los Angeles district reaches a good second.

It is not generally known that San Francisco-San Mateo district was responsible for over 44 mililon pounds.

This is the commercial record. If added to this is the catch talked of by our local Isaac Waltons, the total justly would be unbelievable.

"GOLD DIGGERS OF BROADWAY" STARTS ON ITS SECOND MONTH

"Gold Diggers of Broadway" started its second month at the Embassy, San Francisco, last Thursday. This picture is one of the unusual type that can be seen two or three times and enjoyed just as much on each occasion. The catchy songs, the beautiful dancing ensembles, the snappy humor, and the romantic angle each form enough individual entertainment to make a picture by themselves. "Gold Diggers of Broadway" is the second musical story to be presented entirely in natural colors. This effect seems to make the picture more life-like, particularly with the characters speaking and singing their lines in the clear manner that is typical of all Embassy presentations.

CAR HURTLES OVER BANK; TWO MEN ARE INJURED

Antone Berger, of 3828 Twenty-second street, and Claude Thompson, of 4088 Nineteenth avenue, San Francisco, suffered serious cuts and bruises when their automobile went over a 150-foot embankment on the Half Moon Bay road west of the Skyline boulevard last Sunday. ATTEMPTS SUICIDE WHEN WIFE FAILS TO RETURN

Joseph Cunningham, aged 24, who shot himself at his home in South San Francisco last Friday night after failure to persuade his young wife to return to him, is reported much improved at the South San Francisco hospital. Mrs. Bernice Cunningham, who was staying at the home of her parents in South San Francisco when Cunningham fired a rifle shot into his chest, has not called to see the patient so far as the records reveal, it was stated by attendants.

The words, "find check enclosed," are entirely superfluous if the check is really in there.

Mr. Grundy says the voters vindicated him even before he was investigated.

I, Frank L. Burlow, have this, the 7th day of November, 1929, bought of Mrs. S. Hale the cigar and candy store located at 6398 Mission street, Daly City, California, and will not be responsible for any bills that she may owe to any one.

(Signed.) FRANK L. BURLOW.

ONE OUT OF TEN RUN AFOUL OF THE LAW

One out of every ten do it—run afoul of the state motor vehicle laws while driving on California highways.

This ratio is based on the fact that approximately 200,000 motorists will be stopped on the highways this year by state traffic officers for infringement of provisions of the California Vehicle Act, according to figures reported to the California State Automobile Association.

Of this number, approximately 100,000 will be arrested and of those arrested about 25,000 will pay fines aggregating half a million dollars.

These estimates are based upon figures of the law enforcement bureau of the Division of Motor Vehicles for the first seven months of the year.

Defective lights caused the most arrests, 31,818 being given tickets. Speeding brought 7,765 arrests, and reckless driving was next with 1,458. Less than one per cent of the arrests were made for driving while intoxicated.

These figures are for the state highway patrol only, and do not consider the arrests made by county and city traffic officers.

It is expected that there will be a considerable reduction in arrests for improper or defective lights in view of the campaign that is now being waged on this section of the Motor Vehicle Act. The California Committee on Public Safety, a stade-wide organization of representative bodies in the state sent out warnings the first half of October that beginning the fifteenth of the month, citations would be issued for defective lights. Scores of arrests have been made, and it is believed that these, with the warnings issued, will tend to call the attention of motorists to their lights and wholesale adjustments will be in order.

Motorists should co-operate with the committee and the enforcement agencies in minimizing preventable accidents due to headlight violations.

Published in the interests of the People of Daly City and vicinity by H. H. Smith and Employees.

What He Wanted

It was during the war. Transports were carrying the American soldiers over the storm-swept Atlantic by the million. A colored regiment was negotiating the crossing and had struck very rough weather. A buck private, sitting on deck, called down below to his buddy:

"Mose, come on up heah an' see dis big ship we's jest passin'."

"Ah ain't comin'," replied Mose, "an' doan you call me ergin until you sees a tree."

Mother: "And what made you stay out so late? Have a flat tire?"

Daughter, dreamily: "No, I'd hardly call him that!"

His Grammar

Teacher (to boy sitting idly in school during writing time): "Henry, why are you not writing?"

Henry: "I ain't got no pen."

Teacher: "Where's your grammar?"

Henry: "She's dead."

"SHUMITE" Wall Board—a good grade at right prices.

Two ladies were discussing a mutual acquaintance. "She has a very magnetic personality," said one.

"Well, she ought to have," replied the other. "Everything she has on is charged.'

"BALDWIN" — the Sootless Coal.

Making It Unanimous

Clerk: "I should like to go to my mother-in-laws funeral this afternoon."

His Employer: "So would I."

Don't Worry

Don't worry if your job is small,
And your rewards are few;
Remember that the sturdy oak
Was once a nut like you.

When you think of Building, think of H. H.

Tom: "Well, Jones, I can tell you're a married man all right. No holes in your socks now."
